

Some weeks ago, when the weather was still fine and the evenings were light and mild, MORE FREQUENTLY laid a hash, somewhere on Dartmoor. Hers followed Babelfish's effort in Crediton which we sadly had to abandon for the sake of our health, as it involved extreme length, footpaths and a bit too much road.

MF, a reasonable person, laid a hash that was not too long and only contained a small amount of road at the end. Being of a sensible length given the time of year, it ended in daylight. Hurrah.

At the start, along with the words, she specified a location for the On-Down which was in a small quarry and therefore quite sheltered and cozy.

The turnout was reasonable. The running on the soft, flattish moor terrain (devoid of nasty trip-ya stones, tufts of grass and bogs) was delightful. The weather, as mentioned, was nice.

At one point, while running, I passed Superbug sitting on his on-down chair, looking as though he had had enough. Very odd, that, as the hash hadn't finished and he had chosen to sit down in a place that was NOT MF's chosen on-down location.

The trail progressed through thick bracken, gorse etc and seemed to be heading back to the start. All the lazy weak pathetic people in front of me found this irresistible and just carried on, ignoring a check. The good people turned left and found the correct trail. It was called on and we shouted and gestured to the bad people but were ignored, alas... The trail then took us a good mile in a big circle before rejoining the road.

When we arrived back, the aforementioned inferior miscreants had joined the even lazier Bug at the WRONG LOCATION.

Had Scoubi dou put out a chair for me and got the beer and nosh? Well probably, as he would have been hungry and thirsty. In any case I sat down to enjoy both...it all tastes so much better when you've correctly finished the hash... with the addition of a lap blanket which made it all so pleasant...sigh.

Thanks, MORE FREQUENTLY for a great, not-too-long daylight hash. May there be more like this! (minus the daylight of course, at least for a few more weeks...)

The above photo shows me with my US ballot having VOTED FROM ABROAD. If you know any Americans, please encourage them to vote asap. If the donald is to be removed from office, dead or alive, there needs to be a landslide of voters in all states. Just saying.
